

The late Ashley Callie used white mosaic tiles, instead of paint, to get across a message about love.

CELEBS CANVAS SUPPORT FOR CHILD WELFARE

A burly rugby player paints two flower children; a talkshow host creates a robust and colourful abstract. Some are surprisingly good; some are surprisingly bad. Some look as if they took a great deal of time and effort; others look like they were slapped together. Whatever the case, all those who have taken part in the Celebrity Art Project deserve congratulations. Their canvases are to be auctioned to raise funds for Child Welfare SA's flagship project, Isolabantwana. Zulu for "Eye on the Child", it is a child-abuse-intervention project being rolled out nationwide. The 50 works of art - including a mosaic piece by the late Ashley Callie and a poem painting by Child Welfare SA ambassador Nataniel - will be on view at the Henry Taylor Art Gallery at Design Quarter in Fourways until March 17. Bids of over R2 000 will be accepted from members of the public. The 15 most popular paintings will be set aside and auctioned at a gala dinner at the Theatre of Marcellus, Emperors Palace on March 17.
